SPORT COURTS GO REGIONAL

Denver, CO – November 2004: New to Amware’s Denver facility is a client that supplies all the necessary equipment and infrastructure to put on some of the most important tournaments in the country; that is if your son, daughter, or grandchild has ever played in their school’s regional volleyball tournament.

This November, Amware has been tasked with providing a local distribution network for deployment of the courts, judges stands, and peripheral support products necessary for putting on large-scale volleyball tournaments. Then, as the client switches their focus on the Southeast, Amware will be there in Atlanta, Georgia to help manage that distribution as well.

“We will be providing [them] a regional anchor-point as they move about the country”, says Paul Castro, Amware’s Denver Facility Manager. “They will be shipping truck-load quantities of mixed product to our facility from another part of the country to allow for the advantages of local distribution efforts in and out of several Colorado arenas scheduled for the coming months. Once they're done here we'll ship everything east to our Atlanta facility where other Amware Craftsmen will be providing the same array of services to them as they come-in and go-out of several Southeastern venues".
